

Powell's Opus Sectile Locations

The list of locations was compiled by Dr Dennis Hadley during private research in the Powell's of Whitefriars archive held by the Victoria and Albert Museum, Archive of Art and Design, London.

A note for users: This list has been transcribed to computerised format by the Tiles and Architectural Ceramics Society. It may contain errors introduced during the transcription process and should therefore be treated as a first draft.

Introduction

The list of opus sectile reredoses and tablets made by James Powell & Sons has been extracted from a larger index of figurative designs by the Whitefriars firm, which excluded the many items of opus sectile that comprised only lettering and/or symbols, emblems and heraldry. Another omission is the decoration of walls with glass tiles, which are identical in composition with opus sectile.

The Order Books do not always state whether a reredos is opus sectile or simply painting on wood or slate. Hence it is possible that some of the entries listed below do not refer to opus sectile. In some cases it is known that the church mentioned has been demolished, but it is likely that many other buildings listed no longer exist, or their fittings have been destroyed.

From 1845 until 1873/4 the Window Cash Books (WCB) form the best record of orders. The so-called Order Books (OB) up to 1869 are scrappy ledgers that deal mainly with initial enquiries. Order Book 1869-1873 is missing, as is Order Book 1882-85. The Order Books, 1873 on, give the date on which a firm order was placed, the WCB give the date on which the order was complete and ready for delivery. Up to the late 1880s the WCB sometimes gives a little more information than the OB. After that time the WCB entries are terse.

Only spasmodically does the record give the name of the designer. An additional source of information (not completely reliable) is the list of cartoons held in stock between (about) 1912 and 1930: Index of Subjects, Cartoon Book. These notebooks give the name of the person drawing (or redrawing) the full size cartoon. This person is probably not the designer. When the designer is named it is only the designer of that particular version e.g. design Coakes for Ayton, might be simply an adaptation to a different shape of Brown's design for Beeley – which makes use of the Wooldridge cartoons for Seaham

The demise of glass tiles and opus sectile

Glass tiles were being made to order in 1926, as apologies were sent to an agent in the USA regarding the delay in an order due to the miners' strike. Probably production of tiles and opus sectile ceased during the Depression of the early 1930s, as leaflets at the Museum of London, believed to be of that date, announce a big reduction of price (an attempt to shift surplus stock).

From the mid-30s onwards opus appears only rarely, and memorial tablets are either of marble, alabaster or Hopton Wood stone; heraldry is carved rather than formed of opus. These orders were subcontracted - apart from the drawings - and the skeletal staff could concentrate on a limited number of skills.
